

I was born in Tehran, Iran. Moved to the US with parents and brother in 1980. Got my BS from CSUF in Applied Math, and Masters in Math Education from SDSU. I have been teaching at Mesa College for the past 19 years. I am married with one son. My husband is an electrical (hardware and software) engineer, working at major tech companies for the past 30 years. My son, Yasha, 23, is 2nd year law student at Georgetown Law School. I love dancing, Korean dramas, hanging out with family and friends, traveling, eating and making good food. I truly love my students and wish them happiness and prosperity. My wish for them is that by the end of each school year, they have learned a lot of Math, discovered its beauty, and that they have enjoyed the time we've spent together.
