

Tracey is a dedicated educator with a passion for empowering students of all ages to see themselves in science. She is adjunct faculty at Miramar college where she is the co-director and coordinator for the SCBC/Miramar Biotechnology Outreach program and an adjunct faculty member in Nutrition at San Diego Mesa College. As a science teacher at Torah High School, she finds it especially rewarding to help high school students get a head start on their college careers by teaching them transferable skills and helping them earn college credit before graduation.

She holds a Ph.D. in Nutritional Sciences from The University of Texas at Austin and a B.S. in Biology from UC San Diego. When she's not working, you can find her with her husband, son, and dog, Penny, or enjoying one of her favorite hobbies: yoga, archery, and travel.